ROLE OF HR IN THE NEW-AGE STARTUP

Nisha Govindarajan
SY MBA in HR & CSR

Most startups face a hard time in trying to allocate capital efficiently and hence limit their functions and departments to core operations mostly. This became more amplified during the pandemic period which became one of the toughest times for startups to survive. Often this means foregoing the role of strategic HR or limiting HR functions to administration and supervision. In my experience at Interview Vector as a Strategic HR intern, I was able to break this barrier and contribute toward creating an HR role that became more of a strategic business partner with the purpose of facilitating all the objectives that the strategic apex of a start-up wishes to achieve.

When it comes to facilitating important activities such as expanding verticals, incorporating training programs and streamlining operations, as an HR it was my role to understand how to facilitate such functions with limited or no monetary capital. For example, streamlining operations were not limited to on boarding an operations team but rather understanding operations enough to introduce automation where ever possible in simple ways such as the creation of templates, the systematizing process by creating breakdown structure, etc.

When the new age HR takes up such a cross-functional role as a business partner, it leaves the entrepreneur free to take a step back from micromanaging and facilitation and focus on the bigger picture of expanding verticals, creating and managing investor relationships, and shaping the start-up into a full-fledged business. The burgeoning of HR with additional focus on the “human touch” element that raises the bar on employee engagement is an interesting crossroads that most startups find themselves at. For employee engagement must Make maximum motivation - in digital environment while ensuring minimum cost is a tough thing to achieve. This is why a talented, strategically thinking new age HR associate is a driver that most entrepreneurs try to find.

TRIBAL ENTREPRENEURSHIP

Vaishnavi Kulkarni
FY MBA Human Resource (A)

The new generation is inclined towards saving the environment and switching towards natural commodities. Looking at the current situation, sustainability is necessary for fulfilling our needs with consideration of future generation needs. There are still some unknown tribal entrepreneurs in India where few of them are recognized and are engaged in innovating unique commodities that are recognized globally too. Tribal clusters are seen to share an inimitable relationship with the nature and their livelihood practices are associated with sustainable practices.

Tribal entrepreneurs have accomplished global recognition with innovations that have left fascinating remarks. These innovations are now being exported from India where some products are biodegradable, which highlights the importance of attempt to avoid using plastic.

The Indian government is also taking some initiative towards promoting tribal entrepreneurs like “NITI Aayog”, the summit includes encouraging tribal entrepreneurs. The youth of our country also believes in sustainability, they tend to hire things more than owning them to save resources. So, the youth will be more supportive towards the tribal entrepreneurs.

Eco-friendly plates made up of tree leaves, natural soaps, and cosmetics, organic tea, tribal architecture etc. are some innovations by Tribal Entrepreneurs. Promoting and bringing the tribal entrepreneurs forward shall be beneficial in the coming years. Innovative sustainable ideas has the potential of doing wonders in the economy. Tribal entrepreneurship goes hand in hand with the sustainability of resources. People are more interested in tribal and organic products more than other chemical products. ‘Self-reliance’ initiative by the government has made the buyers aware with leaving no doubt that supporting travel entrepreneurs will be successful.

India and the United States of America are two shut allies for each other in terms of defense and business. India is U.S.A's most treasured Asian partner relation and diplomatic ties between both the countries had been by no means correct like they are today and some of the predominant reasons for it are India's new and more aggressive world-leading policies, the upward thrust of Indian diaspora in the U.S.A which forms of 4 million people, Indians have also emerged as Second most powerful minority group in U.S.A after Jews. Indians- Americans form the most educated, law-abiding, and make surprising contributions to the I.T sector, the electronics sector, and the pharmaceutical sector. But here a question arises what newly elected president can bring to on table for India?

President Donald Trump accompanied aggressive 'American First' policies whereas Democrats records of being friendly with New Delhi from John.F.Kennedy to Barack Obama all of them focused to construct better relations with India. Joe Biden, who was the deputy of Former President of U.S.A, Barack Obama, is stated to have good relations with Prime Minister of India, Narendra Modi, already. Throughout his campaign, Joe Biden mentioned reversing some decision of President Donald Trump, in which India is deeply invested and is affecting India at many fronts, such as imparting reliefs in H-1B Visa Norms, reinvestment in Multilateral agencies like WTO, NATO, Paris Accords, and Special Trade Status for India. It is expected to have more favorable trade policies under Joe Biden for India as he will comply with a more international approach. But we should keep one thing in our minds 'There are no friends and foe between countries, only interest.

INNOVATIVE STRATEGIES BY STARTUPS DURING THE FESTIVE SEASON

Nidhi Kulkarni
FY MBA International Business (A)

Festival season brings with it holidays, family get-together and plenty of joy. The widespread celebratory mood gives people reason enough to enjoys food delicacies and exciting shopping sprees. It is an undeniable fact that amidst festivities people are willing to spend much more than they could on usual days. This directly translates into huge sales opportunities for companies, forcing them to style their marketing strategies accordingly. With Dussehra, Durga Pooja, Diwali, etc. all lined up next to every other, a rush of discounts awaits to multiply the sales across different sectors. While consumers witness discounts during the festive season, to work hard to draw in consumer's attention, much before the season commences.

Strategies one can implement:-

1. Leverage Social Media to Increase Your Presence

- It's no secret that folks are glued to their mobile phones for an honest part of the day, as they're doing everything from socializing to shopping online. Visibility on social media is usually increased by the use of engaging messages and visuals on their pages.
- Lucrative festival offers and announcing new product launches can draw people instantly to their page. This can play a significant part in capturing consumer interest and increasing sales.

2. Customization and Packaging

- The presentation of products matters an outstanding deal to the new-age consumer. Companies can give their packaging a replacement twist as per the occasion. By using Diwali themes and customized messages on packages, they are going to trigger the customer's curiosity, merely enough to inspire a purchase.
- Indian festive season is one of the only times to make investments backed by the emotional bond brands share with their audience. That said, they could curate marketing campaigns centering on emotions, which are on top of the mind of their audience.

3. Using Nostalgia and Related Emotions

Messaging that is high on reminiscing childhood days or festive memories doesn't only enable better connection with the purchasers but also promotes the authenticity of the brand. Moreover, watching the relatable content, which can ignite nostalgia; customers immediately start feeling the urge to share it with their family and friends. This increases the brand's visibility and should sometimes even still make a loyal customer base.
