Entrepreneurship Lessons from Movies & TV Shows

HOUSE of CARDS

TV shows and movies are no longer just sources of entertainment—they've become powerful tools for learning, especially in the world of entrepreneurship. They bring to life the raw, emotional, and practical journey of building something from nothing, showing passion, persistence, innovation, and the courage to take risks.

Entrepreneurship isn't only taught in classrooms or through textbooks. Today, the television and film industry plays a vital role in shaping how people view and understand the business world. Through compelling storytelling, these platforms turn complex entrepreneurial concepts into real, relatable experiences that stick with the viewer.

These stories showcase the highs and lows of entrepreneurial life—idea generation, pitching, failure, reinvention, and leadership. They reveal the mindset it takes to turn a vision into reality. Viewers get to witness problem-solving in action, strategic thinking, teamwork, and ethical decision-making—all essential entrepreneurial qualities.

What sets this learning apart is how emotionally engaging it is. It doesn't just inform—it inspires. It gives viewers the push they need to believe in their ideas and take action.

TV shows and films prove that entrepreneurship is more than profit-making; it's about creating value, driving change, and staying resilient. They make business feel human, achievable, and exciting.

In short, they don't just tell stories. They spark ambition, fuel creativity, and light the fire in every aspiring entrepreneur's heart.

the social network

Movies are not merely for entertainment, for they also give us insightful glimpses into entrepreneurship, innovation, and the intricacies of building a venture from scratch. A classic example of this is The Social Network (2010), which chronicles the creation of Facebook alongside the story of its co-founder Mark Zuckerberg. The movie gives a fascinating glimpse into the world of startups, showing the successes and the failures of entrepreneurship.

One of the largest takeaways from The Social Network is the power of a good idea, along with timely action. While the idea of a social network was not new, Zuckerberg's quick formation and expansion of Facebook ultimately paid off. The movie also emphasizes the power of the founder's flexibility, as he repeatedly changed things to improve the product.

Besides, the film emphasizes the difficulties that entrepreneurs go through, such as trust, court cases, and ethics. The alienation that happens between Zuckerberg and his co-founder Eduardo Saverin indicates the importance of communication and well-defined terms at the very start. The Social Network educates us that entrepreneurship is all about vision, fearless decisions, and sometimes difficult sacrifices.

In brief, the movie provides helpful advice for anyone seeking to learn about the dynamics of technology entrepreneurship.

THE DEVIL WEARS PRADA
A NEW MUSICAL

"FROM HEELS TO HUSTLE: WHAT THE DEVIL WEARS PRADA TEACHES ENTREPRENEURS"

The Devil Wears Prada (2006), directed by David Frankel and based on the novel by Lauren Weisberger, is more than just a stylish drama set in the glamorous world of fashion. It follows the journey of Andrea Sachs (Anne Hathaway), a fresh graduate aspiring to become a journalist, who lands a job as the assistant to Miranda Priestly (Meryl Streep), the powerful editor-in-chief of the fictional fashion magazine Runway.

While the film is primarily seen as a commentary on the high-pressure world of fashion, it also offers several takeaways for aspiring entrepreneurs & business leaders.

Key Entrepreneurial Learnings from the Film:

1. The Power of Adaptability:

Andrea starts out as an outsider in the fashion world but eventually adapts and excels. Entrepreneurs must be willing to adapt to new environments, even if the field is unfamiliar or initially uncomfortable.

2. Learning from Leadership (Good & Bad)

Miranda Priestly's leadership is intimidating and sometimes toxic, but she is also a visionary. Entrepreneurs can learn both what to do (high standards, clarity, decisiveness) and what not to do (lack of empathy, poor work-life balance) from her style.

3. Brand Image Matters:

Runway magazine is not just a publication — it's a brand. Entrepreneurs must understand the importance of brand value, customer perception, and visual identity in building a successful business.

4. Work Ethic & Sacrifice:

Andrea's transformation is marked by long hours and personal sacrifices. Entrepreneurs often need to commit fully, especially in the startup phase, balancing ambition with personal well-being.

5. The Cost of Success:

The movie asks a critical question: What are you willing to give up for success? Entrepreneurs should define their boundaries early and ensure that business goals don't come at the expense of personal values and relationships.

6. Mentorship and Growth:;

Though Miranda is tough, she indirectly mentors Andrea by pushing her beyond her limits. Entrepreneurs must seek mentors, even if challenging, to unlock personal and professional growth.

ROCKET SINGH

SALESMAN OF THE YEAR

CUSTOMER-CENTRICITY & ETHICAL ENTREPRENEURSHIP

Rocket Singh: Salesman of the Year, starring Ranbir Kapoor, tells the quietly powerful story of Harpreet Singh Bedi — a fresh graduate with average marks but an extraordinary sense of integrity. As he steps into the cutthroat world of corporate sales, he's quickly disillusioned by the unethical practices around him. But instead of walking away, Harpreet does something bold: he builds a parallel company — Rocket Sales Corp — within the same office space, driven by honesty, empathy, and stellar customer service. With zero flash and minimal resources, he wins clients not through manipulation, but through trust and value.

The film champions the power of doing business differently, showing that success doesn't always mean playing dirty or going big. It's about building relationships, listening to your customers, and standing by your principles, even when the system works against you.

Harpreet's journey reminds aspiring entrepreneurs that ethics and excellence can coexist. In fact, they can be a startup's greatest assets. In a world that often celebrates shortcuts, Rocket Singh is a tribute to long-term thinking, quiet leadership, and the courage to build with conscience.

JOBS

A STORY OF VISION, FRICTION, AND RETURN

The movie Jobs, from 2013, is more than a biopic - it's a crash course on entrepreneurship, vision and leadership. In the opening scene, it is evident that Jobs was not motivated by fame or wealth. It was all about the product. The feel of it. The way it looked, responded, lived in someone's hand. That obsession with detail runs like a thread through the film.

Most impressive is how quietly and assertively he chased his vision. He wasn't building computers - he was trying to change how people interacted with technology. He was hard to get along with, often dismissive, but highly motivated. The time with Wozniak, the emotional struggles, and the early garage scenes all show a man struggling with his ambitions and his shortcomings at the same time.

Even when Jobs is pushed out of Apple, the film never portrays it as a failure. It feels more like a pause because you know he is coming back, Stronger and Sharper.
In the end, Jobs isn't much of a business move. It's about belief in ideas and in instinct. In the courage to say "no" to good enough. And that's what stays with you even after the movie ends.

THE FOUNDER

A REAL-WORLD BUSINESS BLUEPRINT FOR ASPIRING ENTREPRENEURS

McDonald's

The Founder is more than just a film—it's a powerful case study in entrepreneurial thinking, perfect for students, educators, and business leaders alike. It narrates the rise of Ray Kroc, who transformed a modest fast-food outlet into McDonald's, one of the world's largest restaurant chains.

The film captures key entrepreneurial lessons—identifying opportunities where others see routine, thinking beyond local success, and building systems that scale. The McDonald brothers invented a fast-service restaurant model, but it was Kroc's visionary mindset that saw its global potential. He focused on consistency, speed, franchising, and—most importantly—real estate, which became the hidden engine of McDonald's growth.

For students and future business leaders, the film emphasizes the importance of persistence, innovation in operations, and strategic thinking. For educators and deans, it's a reminder that business success often comes from unconventional ideas, and nurturing those can lead to extraordinary outcomes.

However, the story also sparks conversations about ethics, partnership, and long-term vision. The Founder is not just inspiring—it's a mirror to every entrepreneur's journey, urging us to dream big, act boldly, and think strategically, while never forgetting the human side of success.

GURU

ENTREPRENEURIAL LESSONS FROM GURU (2007)
THE SUPREMACY OF A DREAMER

Following the life of industrialist Dhirubhai Ambani, Guru is directed by Mani Ratnam and offers a compelling tale that embodies the essence of Indian entrepreneurship. The film's protagonist, Gurukant Desai, evolves from a small-town dreamer, fulfilling his own dreams to ultimately becoming a business tycoon. Entrepreneurial journeys are inherently complicated due to the significant challenges they present, particularly those committed to achieving their vision in a socially compelling workable and `responsible' approach in the face of adversity.

One of the predominant undertones in Guru is the importance of getting outside terrific dreams. Guru not only dreams of loads of wealth; he responsibly will wake his dream of fundamentally transforming an economy and relates in mind that he still has more to grow in that chain from limiting tradition. The film communicates the need for entrepreneurs to amass confidence, resilience and the risk-taking behaviors which feature highly within a hazard-bound and bureaucratic localized and constricting system.

Another significant under-themes is about endurance and resilience. In the face of negative criticisms, regulatory bricks, and dismissive betrayals, Guru simply moves on. His core belief in his central ideas, and agile adjustment skills allows him to be 'unshakeable' on which to bolster more resilience. Guru also raises some important questions about ethics and what ambitions accompany visions, thus capturing the inherent complexity of entrepreneurship.

Fundamentally, Guru is more than a film; it serves as an immediate lesson in doggedness, innovative action, and the urgency of dreaming big, not solely pursuing profit. Guru encourages aspiring entrepreneurs to believe in themselves and to not wait for permission to inspire change.

ENTREPRENEURSHIP LESSON FROM "BAND BAAJA BAARAAT"

Band Baaja Baaraat is not just a romantic comedy but also a great resource for learning about entrepreneurship. The film is about Shruti and Bittoo, two fresh college graduates who start from scratch a wedding planning business in Delhi.The value of identifying a niche and starting small is one crucial lesson. Shruti's business idea was inspired by her observation of the increasing demand for well-organized wedding preparation.

Together, they develop their brand, "Shaadi Mubarak," by getting active, understanding customer needs, and producing unique experiences.Another important lesson can be learned from the dynamics of partnerships. Even when their personal and professional lives get entwined, the movie emphasizes the value of respect for one another, boundaries that are apparent, and a shared objective of financial success.

By concentrating on building credibility and trust in the market, reacting quickly to criticism, and taking criticism seriously, the duo also learns from their early mistakes.

Band Baaja Baaraat teaches aspiring entrepreneurs to be streetwise, persistent, and customer-focused. It also shows that with perseverance and creativity, a small idea can become a major business.

CONCLUSION

Films and television programs do more than entertain—they teach entrepreneurship lessons by showing real-world challenges, out-of-the-box thinking, and the grit needed to thrive in business. These visual tales make business concepts easier to grasp and remember giving hands-on insights into leadership, risk-taking, creativity, and problem-solving.

Take "The Social Network," for example. It shows why having a big dream matters and how to handle partner relationships. "The Pursuit of Happiness" proves the power of not giving up when things go wrong. Programs like "Shark Tank" teach how to sell ideas, see things from investors' eyes, and change based on what others say. At the same time, "Silicon Valley" pokes fun at the ups and downs of startup life and stresses the worth of new ideas and teamwork.

These stories also show tough choices smart planning, and why understanding feelings matters. They remind new business owners that doing well isn't just about money—it's about what you believe in and how you lead.

To wrap up, movies and TV shows act as casual yet powerful teaching tools for entrepreneurs. They push viewers to think big, act brave learn from mistakes, and keep going—key parts of building successful businesses in real life.

ROOTS OF GRATITUDE

A Green Tribute to Mentors

"A mentor is someone who allows you to see the hope inside yourself."
- Oprah Winfrey

With this heartfelt belief, the Budding Entrepreneurs Forum organized a special plant drive named "Roots of Gratitude". This thoughtful event was all about expressing love, respect, and gratitude to the mentors who have supported and guided us like a lighthouse in a storm. In this unique initiative, we gifted small plants (saplings) to our mentors. But these weren't just ordinary gifts. Each plant symbolized the values, care, and strength our mentors have planted in us. Just like how a plant grows slowly with care, sunlight, and water, we too grow with the love, knowledge, and guidance our mentors give us.

Why Plants?

We chose plants because they represent growth, life, and continuity. A plant is a living reminder that with time, care, and the right support, beautiful things can grow. In the same way, our mentors help us grow into strong, responsible, and kind individuals. These plants are a daily reminder of their contribution in our lives.

A Perfect Time for Gratitude

What made the "Roots of Gratitude" drive even more special was its timing. The event took place just a few days before our exams. It was a stressful time for everyone, full of assignments, studies, and exam pressure. Yet, our team came together and worked with so much dedication, energy, and love. Despite their packed schedules, the team managed everything so smoothly, right from planning and arranging the saplings to personally handing them over to mentors. Every small detail was handled with care and sincerity. It showed that when the heart is in the right place and the purpose is strong, anything is possible.

The True Meaning Behind the Drive

"Roots of Gratitude" was not just about giving a gift. It was about celebrating the relationship between a mentor and a student. It was about acknowledging the silent strength our mentors lend us every single day. It was about saying thank you, not with words, but with something that grows and lives on. This small but meaningful act reminded us all that appreciation should be expressed often and in thoughtful ways. It also taught us the importance of managing our time well, working as a team, and staying committed to our values. As these saplings grow into strong plants, they will always remind our mentors and us of the roots of kindness, patience, and guidance they helped plant in our lives.

A Note of Thanks

To every mentor who received a plant, we say thank you from the bottom of our hearts. And to every team member who made this possible, your efforts truly made a difference. "Roots of Gratitude" is now a memory we'll always cherish and a tradition we hope continues to bloom year after year.

IGNITING DREAMS

The Branding Team's Journey to Empower Entrepreneurs

In a world full of noise, the Branding Team of the Budding Entrepreneurs Forum has emerged as a voice of innovation, creativity, and purpose. Since our launch in February 2025, we've gone beyond buzzwords—creating real impact for real businesses. This quarter, our journey hit new milestones with Createo and Riwayat.

After shaping Createo into a brand people notice—with viral reels, meme marketing, and café collabs—we proved that smart storytelling drives real engagement. Createo gave us momentum. But we were ready for something deeper.

Enter Riwayat — a brand rooted in tradition and craftsmanship. Specialising in hand-threaded Kashmiri kurtis, Riwayat isn't just fashion — it's cultural storytelling. Every kurti is unique, and so was our strategy: a refreshed logo, tagline, photoshoots, and a complete Instagram revamp to reflect elegance and authenticity.

We didn't just show products. We showed soul. And Riwayat is now steadily finding its voice. What makes us different? We don't follow templates. We build them. We study, plan, create, and execute — brand by brand, story by story. Whether it's content strategy, brand voice, social growth, or just figuring out what works best — we've got your back.
